David Broza

Israeli superstar David Broza is considered one of the world's most dynamic and vibrant performers. From his whirlwind finger picking to Flamenco percussion and rhythms to a signature rock and roll sound, David's charismatic and energetic performances have delighted audiences throughout the world.

More than a singer-songwriter, David is also known for his commitment and dedication to several humanitarian projects, predominantly the Israeli-Palestinian conflict. Since 1977, when his hit song "Yihye Tov" first hit the airwaves, David has been working to promote a message of peace. The song's lyrics, roughly translated as "Things Will Be Better," struck at the heart of the issue – that people all over the world want peace. Now with a string of multi-platinum albums behind him, David still strives to hone this message.

He has also been named a Good Will Ambassador for U.N.I.C.E.F. A powerful musician, passionate peace advocate, and music industry innovator, David Broza awes and inspires audiences with his sincere message and musical allure.

Originally from Israel, guitarist and composer Alon Albagli works and lives in New York City. He has established himself as a remarkable voice on his instrument and has shared the stage with notables from the improvised music scene, including Ari Hoenig and Jojo Kuo (Fela Kuti). Not bound by a single genre, Alon instead draws from a multitude of styles. His love for folk and rock, as well as classical music, is embedded in his improvising and writing. This eclectic taste is evidenced by collaborations with Grammy nominated producer Jonathan Dagan (J.Viewz), and Lee Bannon (Ninja Tune Records).

Alon Albagli

The early guidance of renowned author and educator Joseph Urshalmi rooted Alon in the classical guitar tradition. Its intricate melodic and harmonic language remained a strong influence throughout his musical career. In order to further his studies, Alon relocated to New York in 2008. He received a scholarship from the New School where he was able to take lessons from esteemed jazz laureates such as Reggie Workman, Junior Mance, Ben Street, and Sam Yahel. It wasn't long before Alon started to perform regularly at some of the most established venues in the city and even internationally.

Establishing and maintaining a strong sense of community has always been important to Alon. His highly anticipated debut record "Only Mountains" embraces this sensibility. Alon is responsible for the entirety of the compositions, but the artistic process of committing the music to tape was very much a collaborative effort. The record is due for release this spring. In the meantime, Alon will keep a busy schedule performing in the city and abroad.

Jay Beckenstein is a saxophone player, smooth jazz artist, owner of BearTracks Studios in Suffern, New York, and together with Jeremy Wall, founder of Spyro Gyra. He also played the saxophone solo on American progressive metal band Dream Theater's "Another Day," from the album Images and Words and the single version of song "Through her Eyes," from the album Metropolis Pt. 2: Scenes from a Memory. He also played a solo part in "Take Away My Pain" on the live album Once in a LIVETIME as well as "Another Day" during the performance of Metropolis 2000: Scenes from New York.

Jay was born in Long Island, New York to a Jewish family. His mother, Lorraine, was an opera singer and his father, Leonard, loved jazz and introduced him to Charlie Parker and Lester Young when he was a baby. He started playing the piano at age five when he moved to Farmingdale, LI. He was given his first saxophone at the age of seven. In his senior year of high school, he and his family moved to Germany. He attended and graduated from Nürnberg American High School in 1969. He has spoken that being Jewish in Germany was positive at the time. However, he has recalled that he once saw an old photo of an elderly neighbor in his SS Nazi uniform while visiting him and he never went back. He received a BA in music from the University at Buffalo in 1973. Trumpeter Dizzy Gillespie once played with the college band while Beckenstein was a band member.

It was in college during summer breaks that he and an old high school friend, Jeremy Wall, played gigs around Long Island. It wasn't until they played at a bar that they came up with spirogyra after looking at it written on a piece of paper under a microscope, but the bar owner misspelled it. Beckenstein has said, "It sounds like what we do - like a lot of motion and stuff." They soon recruited then-sixteen-year-old keyboardist Tom Schuman and worked on recording their debut album. However, due to lack of funds, the record was going to be their last album until they gave it away and sold 100,000 copies. From there, they got a deal and released their next album in 1979.

In 2000, Beckenstein released his first solo album, Eye Contact, which charted #23 on the Top Contemporary Jazz Albums. Beckenstein plays alto, soprano and tenor saxophone. In the early years of Spyro Gyra he played a Selmer Mark VI alto saxophone, before changing to Yamaha in the 1980s. Until the late 1990s he played a Yamaha YAS-62 alto (Beechler White Diamond S6S mouthpiece and Vandoren No. 3½ reeds) and YSS-62 (Selmer C mouthpiece) soprano saxophones. However, he subsequently switched to instruments made by LA Sax. His current alto is the "Chicago Jazz" model by LA Sax, fitted with a Beechler White Diamond S6S mouthpiece and Vandoren Traditional No. 3 Reeds. His soprano is a Keilwerth SX90 with a black-nickel finish and gold hardware, fitted with a Selmer C mouthpiece and Vandoren Traditional No. 3 reeds. His "burnished brass" finish tenor is also made by LA Sax. Beckenstein is an endorser of Orpheo flutes, clarinets, and saxophones.
